What is a U Visa?

frequently asked QUESTIONS

What are the benefits of having a U visa?

If you have U visa status, you can live and work lawfully in the U.S. for three years with the possibility of adjusting your status after three years to that of a lawful permanent resident (aka greencard holder). With a U visa, you are also able to sponsor certain family members to immigrate to the U.S. If the U visa holder is under 21, he or she can include a spouse, child, parent or unmarried sibling under the age of 18 as a derivative family member. If the U status holder is 21 or older, he or she can include a spouse or child as a derivative family member.

What kinds of crimes are covered?

Crimes covered include: rape, torture, trafficking, incest, domestic violence, sexual assault, abusive sexual contact; prostitution; sexual exploitation, female genital mutilation; being held hostage; peonage; involuntary servitude; slave trade; kidnapping; abduction; unlawful criminal restraint; false imprisonment; blackmail; extortion; manslaughter; murder; felonious assault; witness tampering; obstruction of justice; perjury; or attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation to commit any of the above mentioned crimes.

Even though immigration is supposed to also consider “similar criminal activity” to those crimes listed in the law, so far advocates have noted that immigration is NOT approving any application for U visa interim relief unless one of the listed crimes in the law is actually involved.

How do I get a U visa?

Right now, no one can get a U visa because the government still has not issued the rules that would make the visas available. NO U VISAS have been issued and none are available yet.

Then what do I do if I am eligible for a U visa?

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (CIS) have made available “U visa interim relief” or “U interim relief.” With U interim relief, you are placed into “deferred action” status, which is NOT a visa status, and only means that immigration authorities are agreeing not to try to remove you from the U.S. for the time being. You are eligible for a work permit. With U interim relief, you can also apply for the same categories of family members as explained above depending on your age.

How do I apply for U interim relief?

You need to submit an application package to CIS that includes the following:

- ✦ Cover letter outlining your eligibility for the relief
- ✦ declaration showing how you meet the eligibility requirements for the relief
- ✦ Your personal ID information
- ✦ A law enforcement certification form signed within the past 6 months
- ✦ Other documentation verifying the criminal activity if it's available
- ✦ Documentation about the substantial physical and/or mental abuse you suffered If applicable, information and documentation about the derivative family members included in the application (i.e., birth certificate proving the relationship between mother, primary applicant, and daughter, derivative)

Do not submit an application for a work permit at the same time because the applicant is not eligible for a work permit unless and until CIS approves the application for U interim relief.

Are there risks to applying for U interim relief?

YES. If you have a criminal record, a previous removal/deportation order, or is already in a valid visa status you should talk to an immigration attorney before submitting any application for U interim relief. Also, there is no guarantee that your application will be approved. If it is denied you risk possibly exposing yourself to being put into removal proceedings.

Can I travel if I have applied for or received U interim relief?

NO. There is no procedure right now for applicants or approved U interim relief grantees to travel outside the U.S. If you leave, even for a very short trip, you may not be able to re-enter, even if you already have U interim relief.
